Harvard By Liz Murray	addicted parents in the Bronx. In school she was taunted for her dirty clothing and lice-infested hair, eventually skipping so many classes that she was put into a girls' home. At age fifteen, Liz found herself on the streets when her family finally unraveled. She learned to scrape by, foraging for food and riding subways all night to have a warm place to sleep. When Liz's mother died of AIDS, she decided to take control of her own destiny and go back to high school, often completing her assignments in the hallways and subway stations where she slept. Liz squeezed four years of high school into two, while homeless; won a New York Times scholarship; and made it into the Ivy League. Breaking Night is an unforgettable and beautifully written story of one young woman's indomitable spirit to survive and prevail, against all odds. Both passed away the following week. A member of the Beardsy's First Nation, Robin had always aspired to be like her father, Howard, also a member of the RCMP. But she faced obstacles along the way, including poor eyesight which had to be surgically repaired, and a teen pregnancy that left her the single young mother of her little girl, Shayne. But Robin persevered, and in 2001 achieved her dream. She was eventually posted to the tiny, intimate detachment at Spiritwood, SK. On that fateful day, irate over the outcome of a court case, Curtis Dagenais almost ran Robin down outside the community's courthouse. A police chase followed, resulting in the death of two of Spiritwood's finest – and the devastation of their families – including the orphaning of two young children – their communities, and the	DVD 305.488 CHA	Gr. 9+

With 84% of the service's clients being Aboriginal, it makes sense that many of its members are, too. LaRonge's EMTs will do whatever it takes to respond to an emergency, and take any means necessary to get to a patient, whether it means hiking ten kilometers through dense muskeg, or maneuvering pitted logging roads, or even flying. But flying has its risks, as EMT's Jodie Stamp and Kristen McKenzie know all too well. Riddled with evidence of gang violence, substance abuse and social dysfunction, Hobbema is not entirely without hope or positive role modeling. Three women in particular have dedicated their lives to making this community a better place: RCMP officer Courtney Reich, who overcame childhood domestic abuse and her own teen pregnancy; EMT Stephanie Buffalo, who survived a horrific roll-over accident in her ambulance on the way to a call; and firefighter and long-time resident Vanessa Nepoose, whose was on call to respond to both her cousin's suicide and her father's cardiac arrest. These women work on Hobbema's front lines, and they – more than anyone – can speak to the traumas, hope and progress of a community struggling to heal.

Episode #4 - Tribal Police: Manitoba's Dakota-Ojibway Tribal Police and Alberta's Blood Tribe Police Force are two of a handful of autonomous police departments run for and by Canada's First Nations communities. They are also two of the largest. Being a female Aboriginal police officer serving on either detachment goes a long way in dealing with the variety of calls that come in. Having been raised within the community they serve, or around similar circumstances, these women can relate to members of the community in ways non-Aboriginal police officers can't, and in ways that many male police officers don't. But regardless of where they're from, police officers face isolation, and theirs can be a lonely lifestyle. Edmonton, Alberta is famous for its hockey, beautiful river valley and massive shopping centres, but is also notorious for its brutal winters. What becomes of the city's homeless population when temperatures plummet? Who takes care of the city's neediest, most forgotten residents? Delores Nataway has a very personal connection to the people she serves through Edmonton's Hope Mission - she's been there, and was once dependent on the Mission to help her through her own homelessness, hopelessness and addiction. Now she ministers to others, while providing bagged lunches and warm meals, addictions treatment for those who are ready for it, and a roof over their heads for the night. Meanwhile, over at the nearby Boyle-McCauley Health Centre, nurse Terri-Lee Spence and social workers Faye Dewar and Geri Whiteman - all of whom are Aboriginal - fight the uphill battle of caring for the medical, social and housing needs of Edmonton's most disenfranchised.	DVD 305.488 CHA	Gr. 9+
