By Christy Jordan-Fenton	The true story of Margaret Pokiak, a young Inuit girl, picks up where the previous book concluded - with her return to her family. Ten-year-old Margaret can hardly contain her excitement. After two years in a residential boarding school, she is finally headed for home. But when she stands before her family at last her mother doesn't recognize her. This was hardly the homecoming Margaret expected. She has forgotten her people's language and can't stomach her mother's food. She isn't even allowed to play with her friend Agnes, because she is now seen as too much like the despised outsiders. She has become a stranger to her own people. In this extraordinary sequel, Margaret must begin a painful journey of learning how to fit in again, how to reconcile her old self with the new. Suggested Use: English Language Arts: Grade 5 - Personal and philosophical context.
